

Easy-To-Set-Up Flag Flying Kit

Here's a quick and easy way to show your patriotism.

The new pvc flag flying kit consists of 4-section 10-ft. tall pole, a 12-in. ground "socket", and a 3 by 5-ft. American flag.

All you do is make a starter hole about 6 in. deep and drive the socket into the ground. The pole sections snap together and you set the pole in the socket. You can quickly set it up anywhere and take it down to mow the lawn.

Sells for $35.

Add-On Basketball "Return Net"

You can shoot free throws all day long without having to chase after the ball with this basketball "return net" that fits any hoop.

The plastic "return net" replaces the original net. It has an angled slide on bottom that sends the ball back to the shooter. The bottom slide can be quickly removed for normal play.

Sells for $18.95 plus S&H.

Lawn Ornament "Pops Up" When Visitors Come To Call

Your friends and neighbors will get a kick out of this "pop-up" lawn ornament that automatically sticks its head up when a visitor approaching your door triggers a hidden motion sensor.

The raccoon, which has a flower pot on its head, delivers a welcome greeting and can even take a recorded message if you're not at home.

Sells for $29.95. Also available is a talking bird in a birdhouse, a dog in a dog house, or an elf holding a lantern that lights your walkway.

Weed Puller Works Like A Mini Tree Spade

This new weed puller digs out even the toughest weeds - roots and all - without a lot of effort and without damaging your lawn.

The "Weed Hound" is a hip-tall steel tool with a handle on top, a step at the bottom, and a cone-shaped circle of six steel tines. You place the tines over the weed and use the step to push them down into the soil, then turn the rod a quarter turn and pull the weed - roots and all - out of the ground. You then push down on a plunger to release the weed from the tines.

"It works like a miniature tree spade, encircling the roots and pulling out the entire plant," says inventor Dana Post. "No other tool allows you to extract the weed, root and all, without stooping over. Also, the cores of soil that it pulls out are only about 3/4 inches in diameter - about the same size as the holes made by an aerator - so it won't damage your lawn. Other weed pullers take out a core that's 2 1/2 to 3 inches in diameter. You can pull over 100 weeds in just 15 minutes and not even get tired."

Sells for about $20.

"Light-N-Grow" Plant Stand

Here's a decorative centerpiece for your yard or garden like nothing you've ever seen before.

The "Light-N-Grow" lights up, sprays water, and shows off your flowers all at the same time. The 5-ft. high unit consists of a hollow pvc tube supported by four legs at the bottom. A hose runs up through the tube and through a circular pipe to a nozzle mounted on top of the pipe. You hook your garden hose or lawn sprinkler system up to a connection at the base of the unit. Water is sent outward in a 10-ft. dia. pattern. Four low-voltage lights mount on "legs" at the bottom and another low-voltage light mounts inside the circular pipe. The main tube supports shelves for three flower pots, with the largest pot at the bottom and the smallest at the top.

"It makes a beautiful pyramid-shaped display, especially at dusk when the lights create a halo effect over the cascading water," says inventor Bill Bohland. "You can use a low-voltage timer to automatically turn the lights on or off. Most of the water sprays out far enough that your flowers won't get overwatered. I set my unit up at home so that it automatically comes on when our sprinkler starts up. A step-down transformer is supplied, allowing you to plug it into any 110 volt outlet."

The tube comes in two pieces that clamp together. Sells for $89.95 including 50 ft. of cable, three flower pots, and the lights.
